MARKET & PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

Risk markets continued to perform well in August, fuelled by continued liquidity injections offered by global central banks and government schemes. Helping the tone was a series of robust economic data for July, ranging from strong US retail sales, payroll growth and housing data, to rising consumer spending in the Eurozone and UK. This follows hot on the heels from bumper readings for June, much of which was due to the easing of lockdowns in many parts of the global economy. Jobs data in most regions has been impressive, though much of this will have been boosted by the furlough initiatives. In the eyes of the US Federal Reserve, we are a long way off from celebrating a return to normal. This was reasserted by Chair Powell who at the end of the month confirmed the medium-term policy of lower interest rates for longer. He importantly expressed the Fed's tolerance to periods when inflation may exceed its 2% target. This delivered an important message to the markets, that it would use as many tools it has to promote employment and ultimately economic growth. This mantra will most likely be adopted by other major central banks.

The USD X-Share Class returned 1.17% in August, and 2.78% for the year to date. In response to the better economic data the benchmark 10-year US Treasury yield rose by 0.18% to 0.71%, and similar moves were seen in UK Gilts. Credit spreads continued to contract, once again outperforming sovereign debt with some sectors, such as subordinated financials up to 3% over the month. Some new liquidity was invested in corporate hybrids, and the standout performers within the Fund were GM, BBVA and Unicredit. The portfolio is expected to continue to benefit from exposure to credit sectors key to global economic recovery, by investing in a combination of senior debt and hybrid instruments to enhance the yield.
